MAKE YOUR OWN SRIRACHA!

by Vicki Medland

Sriracha (say it See-racha) is the favorite hot sauce in the US. After a two-year drought decimated the spring 22 crop, there was a shortage at our grocery stores. No need to fear another sriracha crisis. Make your own! Thanks Vicki for teaching us how it's done!

Introducing New Leaf's 2023 MCHS AmeriCorps Members!

Serving AmeriCorps to support health food access and education and to build a sustainable local food system in a clean environment

My name is Samantha Daggett. I am a Communication major at UW-Green Bay. I have emphasis in social media, mass media, organizational communication, and public relations

Hi everyone, I am Kongcheng Thao, and I am Asian American, specifically Hmong. I am a junior at the UW-Green Bay majoring in business management with a minor in sustainability. I love to play volleyball and getting to meet new people. I enjoy spending time with my family and friends as well.

Urban Food Forest Initiative

Urban Food Forests, Edible Landscapes, Community Orchards are taking root in Brown County. New Leaf Foods, Inc. kicked off our Urban Food Forest initiative at the spring 2022 Garden Blitz.

Food forests are a form of permaculture, or a system of regenerative agriculture.

Welcome Brittany Arnold, Urban Food Forest Coordinator

Hi I'm Brittany! I'm very passionate about fresh food access and sustainability. I believe in building strong community through direct action and in taking care of those around us. I very much look forward to building within our community and helping create a culture emphasizing education, action, and the positive impact we can make around us.

My background is in high volume retail management and sales and my educational background is in Psychology and Human Development. I'm particularly interested in the social impacts of the urban sustainability and afforestation movements.

I look forward to learning with all of you and remember, mole hills can make mountains.
